ADVERTISEMENT.

The intent of this little work is to point out the great roads leading from the Metropolis to every Market and Borough town in England and Wales, as well as every Turnpike Road, separate from the Main Road that leads from Town to Town throughout each County; distinguishing the Market towns by the Roman print Character, and the Boroughs by Stars, which also denote the number of Members they return to Parliament.

At the bottom of each Map is prefixed the distance of the principal places in the County from the Metropolis, and the junction of the Roads of one Map with the other, is described by reference letters given at the entrance of each Road into each respective County.

The main Road to London from any place can be immediately traced by a reference to the Roads, where that Rout is always described by the words London Road or Road to London: the greatest care having been taken in selecting the Roads leading to the Metropolis, the traveller may place a reliance that none, but such as are described in that Direction will answer that purpose; observing also, that his route from London to any distant place is given by the foregoing method; referring to the place wanted, and the same Roads which applies to the one will answer for the other.

With an anxious desire to render this work useful to travellers, the Proprietor has paid every attention to accuracy, and in the endeavour to render it of real utility, he has received a variety of information respecting the roads, through a medium by which the public has been sensibly benefited in the great and important article of correspondence &c. — Assisted by the report of the different Post Masters throughout the Kingdom (made with the concurrence of the Comptroller General of the Post Office) of the number of Turnpike Roads leading from their respective Towns, he has been enabled to correct a variety of errors, and to offer the public a travelling Companion which he flatters himself will not be thought unworthy their patronage.
